PRODUCER

This independent family-owned winery in Piave has been going since 1931. They own all their own vineyards, not needing to buy in any grapes or wines. This way they can ensure they maintain high standards every step of the way. Cà di Rajo identifies itself in the development and production of autochthonous varieties of Treviso's province. In a territory where old traditions and innovations are woven together, the winery is dedicated to capturing each season's unforgettable colours, perfumes and tastes.

VITICULTURE + VINIFICATION

Grapes from "Bellussera" vineyard - the Bellussera is an ancient method of vine cultivation based on a ray system. Mainly common in Veneto region, the system was invented, towards the end of 19th century, by brothers Bellussi from Tezze di Piave in an attempt to defeat downy mildew. The structure consists of four meter high poles that are linked by iron cables arranged in rays. Every pole supports four vines positioned at 2.50 meters from the ground. From each vine originates permanent cordons, which grow inclined upwards and diagonally to the lane, forming a system of rays. Fermentation was done by Charmat method. Secondary fermentation was done in tank over a long 90 day period - much longer than the majority of other Proseccos, giving the wine more complexity and depth. No malolactic fermentation. No oak was used.

TASTING NOTE

Bright, straw yellow with green highlights. The perlage is delicate and persistent. The bouquet is reminiscent of acacia flowers, has good intensity with particular notes of apple, lemon and grapefruit. The palate has good structure, soft with emerging fruity notes with good balance.
